People,

An amazing piece of news, which has much bearing on the Hollow Earth Theory:

Multicolored Snow Falls over Three Siberian Regions

<http://www.enn.com/today.html?id=12150>

We already know that red and orange clouds of pollen fall all over the higher latitudes of the Arctic. Nansen and other explorers found this. It covers icebergs that drift down to Northern Canada.

And it originates in the hollow earth. Olaf Jansen told of fields of wildflowers that ring the inner opening, whose pollen get blown out as inner earth discharges winds to the outer world, and then gets deposited on the ice.

They say that it was examined and that it "might" be soil or sand that blew in from Kazakasthan, but it should be as obvious under the microscope to a biologist whether or not it is soil or pollen. They should say right away what it is.

And how would it blow Northwards over about 1,000 from Kazakasthan during the winter when the air currents blow down from the North?

We know where it came from.

Dean
